BRAVE GIRL RISING

Girl Rising, the non-profit behind the global campaign for girls’ education and empowerment, debuts a powerful new film, Brave Girl Rising. Made in collaboration with the International Rescue Committee and filmed in one of the largest refugee camps in the world, Brave Girl Rising tells how a courageous girl, inspired by the magical dreams of her mother and the sisterhood of her friends, succeeds in getting the education she deserves.

Directed by Academy Award nominee Richard Robbins and Martha Adams, written by poet laureate Warsan Shire, and voiced by Tessa Thompson and Golden Globe winner David Oyelowo, this short film is a testament to how hope and love can propel us beyond even the bleakest of circumstances.

This screening will include a discussion with opening remarks from Vice Provost Cindy Fan, featuring director Martha Adams and officials from the International Rescue Committee, moderated by Asli Ü. Bâli, Faculty Director of the Promise Institute for Human Rights. Following the discussion, there will be a reception with drinks and light bites.
